Another Source Founder and CEO Honored as a Nellie Cashman Award Finalist.

Seattle, Wash. – September 18, 2006 – The Women Business Owners (WBO) announced Jan Scott, founder and CEO of Another Source, Inc, as one of the five finalists for the Nellie Cashman Award, one of Puget Sound's oldest, and most prestigious awards celebrating the lives and achievements of extraordinary women who have made outstanding contributions to the status of women in business through leadership, community involvement and professional success.

Jan Scott founded Another Source, Inc. in 1991 to bridge the gap between employment agencies and classified job listings and Internet job boards. Scott combined nearly 20 years of employment industry experience with entrepreneurial vision to create a service for employers and applicants that saves time, identifies talent, and creates choice. This has positioned Another Source as the Seattle area's only employment referral service.

Together with her team of 12, Scott is committed to helping introduce employers and candidates, looking to match knowledge, skills, and abilities with company culture. As a leader, Scott strives to build an organization where employees have the opportunity to contribute to overall success. Scott strives to understand the personal and professional goals of her staff and provides the tools, teaching, leadership and encouragement to help them succeed.

Her commitment to her business, employees, and community has been recently honored with various awards including a Best Company to Work For by Washington CEO magazine, Innovative Business Practices winner by the Better Business Bureau, a Fastest Growing Private Company by the Puget Sound Business Journal, and a YWCA Major Donor.

Scott has served as a board member for the Southcenter Rotary supporting Habitat for Humanity, Tukwila Food Pantry, and Northwest Harvest. She has been active with the Society of Human Resource Management, Seattle Chamber of Commerce, and YWCA.
