Alliance with GreenJobInterview.com creates incredibly cheap out-of-state hiring opportunities for employers

Another Source makes long-distance interviewing easy and affordable to clients

SEATTLE, Wash. (February 25, 2009) – Seattle-based employment referral service company, Another Source, recently formed an alliance with up-and-coming GreenJobInterview.com. Aside from drastically reducing expensive out-of-state interview costs, this move allows Another Source and their clients to expand the potential talent pool for industry and skill specific positions nationwide all for less than the cab fee from the airport to your company.

“Companies typically spend an average of $650 to $2,000 for an initial interview with a job candidate when travel outside the local area is involved,” said Greg Rokos, president of GreenJobInterview.com. “Now, they can set up a live, real-time GreenJobInterview and see candidates face-to-face with NO travel and without having to leave their desks for a cost of $49.99 per half hour – and they only pay for the time used.” It is a point-and-click on-demand service that requires no long-term contracts or minimum usage. It operates with only a webcam that is provided by GreenJobInterview.com to both the customer company and the job candidate. The process of setting up and connecting a GreenJobInterview is so simple anyone can do it in minutes.

Aside from being a cheap alternative to flying candidates in and being easy to install and implement this system is friendly to the green movement of today. GreenJobInterview.com was created as an environmental tool as it allows effective hiring with minimal need for travel, gas, emissions and waste. There is no bigger burden and waste of time and money than flying in a candidate and realizing within the first hour that this is the wrong person for the job. Another Source looks to take full advantage of this
